PIG SANCTUARY

Linus
Dear Supporter,

We have come full circle once again with the holiday season approaching us, a time of good will and a message of Peace on Earth. As I write this letter it is the International Day of Peace. Those celebrating this day say there is so much hope in the world. And we are part of it! Those celebrating today want to allow the possibility for a new way of relating together as ONE PEOPLE. I have hope also on this day. My hope is that we will not only come together as One People but as One with all life. This is not an easy concept since it is hard to accept even different cultures among humans. To expand that to accept the “cultures” of other sentient beings is even more difficult. But they do have cultures of their own. When one lives with nearly 600 pigs day and night it becomes obvious they have their own vocal language, body language, behaviors, social groups, and friends and enemies who make up their “culture” and it is complex as is ours. It becomes impossible to not think of all other sentient beings as part of the Whole and to harm one of them is like harming one of our own.

We are far from the same but we share nearly all the same emotions. One only has to watch a mother pig fiercely defending her babies, or a pig gently nuzzling and lying next to a companion who has departed, or babies of all kinds playing with one another to know we are all one and the hope for Peace should be extended to all beings.

Changing the minds of people to visualize peace and respect for all beings is difficult, but I do know that the process has begun with you who help our pigs. Your many wonderful notes, letters, and donations let us know how you feel about animals, pigs in particular. There are millions of others who are kindred spirits but we must continue to spread the word to all we know. As people learn more about the social structures, emotions, intelligence and family bonds of animals, maybe they will begin to think that we all share the same desire; to live in peace and with respect.

The pigs at Ironwood have been able to form the social groups of their choice and the freedom to develop their unique culture and express their feelings at the sanctuary. When I saw Huey grazing on the remaining hay this afternoon in our main field with his life long friend and brother Louie, I realized what a special place Ironwood has become to the pigs in our care. And I know that when the day is done and these two pigs are snuggled together in their shelter they will be content and at peace. Thank you for helping to make this happen and Happy Holidays!

Sincerely,

Mary Schanz

The Piggies were napping all snug in their fields while visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads.
New Family Members

Over the past nine months, January through September, we have welcomed 61 new pigs to our large family at Ironwood. Some of their stories have been told, many have not.

I have chosen a few of their stories since they are representative of frequent recurrent themes about why so many pigs are released to us. Some of these reasons are not the commonly thought of reasons to release a pig such as too big, moving, or divorce. I hope reading the stories of these pigs may give you a chance to understand how some of our accepted practices in this country affect the animals who are the not so willing participants of these practices.

Macy was released to us on August 4th. Her mom sent Macy’s story with her to Ironwood. “When she was very young Macy was used in a petting zoo. After that she was kept in a pen with a lot of large goats. Macy had to fight for everything. I did some work for the people that owned Macy. When I spotted her she had nasty sunburns with lots of sores and other problems.” Ann was able to rescue her. She had Macy for almost five years but due to health issues and Macy becoming aggressive she had to give her up. She loved her a lot and she was sad having to give Macy away.

Pepper is a beautiful spotted pig who arrived on August 13th. Elizabeth was pregnant and going to deliver in 4 weeks and had “no way to take care of him. Pepper is neutered, house trained, car friendly, he can be an inside/outside pig.” She cares about Pepper and inquires often but still Pepper has lost his home.

“We have a 6 month old baby so having a pig isn’t reasonable. He doesn’t get any attention and sits in a tiny pen all the time.” This was a quote from Atticus’ family before we picked him up.

People innocently go to visit petting zoos not knowing what goes on behind the scenes. They want their kids to see baby animals and have a chance to pet them. We have gotten many pigs in from petting zoos who no longer were serving a purpose for them since they do grow up and are no longer cute. Also their care behind the petting pens is often very poor. We got one 10-week-old baby in from a New River petting zoo who, it was reported, had nothing to eat but soggy bread. She was adopted and soon had to be euthanized because all her joints where so ill formed. I would like to discourage people from supporting petting zoos.

Being pregnant, planning to become pregnant, or already having a baby may be good reason to pass on adopting a pig. Maybe a better time to adopt a pig would be when the children are older. Below are three examples of pigs that lost their family as people began new families.

Barnabus

“A year ago we wrote and asked if you could take our pig dear Barnabus into your sanctuary. At that time we were just about to experience the birth of our first child and now we’re pregnant with our second.”

Organizations such as preschools or other schools sometimes breed animals, pigs as well, so the children can enjoy the babies or maybe learn about the animals that they are breeding. We have gotten pigs from Austin Centers for Exceptional Students in Phoenix and more recently from the Little Ranch Schoolhouse preschool here in Tucson. We were told that the preschool breeds the animals and sells them to buy the food necessary to feed them. Little Jager here is one such pig. A couple purchased him at a very young age, not neutered, and found after a very few months they had to move to a smaller place and could not keep him. We feel breeding animals in a school is the wrong message to give children. A much better solution would be for these schools to rescue animals from local shelters and teach the children about the care and rescue of animals and the need to spay and neuter.

One of the most common reasons we acquire pigs is aggression. Little Haiden is 4 years old and he had been here on several occasions to board with us. Not long ago we got an e-mail from his mom and she said he was getting so bad she was afraid to go in the pen with him. He liked her husband but he was out of town a lot and Haiden was becoming impossible. There are a number of ways to deal with aggression which is very common in pigs once they reach the age of 2 to 3 or sometimes earlier. The best way I know is to have a companion pig, but often people do not want a second pig and they reach the end of their rope and call us to take their pig. This is one reason we only adopt in pairs.

Abandonment and strays are far more common than one would think. People who visit here are always amazed when I point out all the stray pigs we get in. I featured Audrey in our last newsletter who was found outside a family’s fence trying to get into their yard. She was clearly abandoned or dumped and near death when the family called us. She is still quite thin but happily eating three meals a day and wandering around the fenced perimeter of the property. Just today we took in our 61st pig of the year and he is a little stray boar from Wittmann that some kind people brought to us. They said he was wandering the neighborhood for nearly two months and was attacked by three dogs last weekend. Somehow he miraculously escaped serious injury and has now found his way to Ironwood.

And lastly on this list of stories of the arrivals from this year is BB’s story. She was rescued by a man who negotiated her release from a member of a religious cult. She was acquired for a religious sacrifice. He was told the pig must be a baby and be in the home for two years before it was sacrificed. It acted as a protector of the family. If the evil spirit of death came to the house the pig would be taken before any family member would. After two years the pig has served its purpose and would be sacrificed. I think I have now heard it all in this business of rescue.

As I look into the faces of these 61 newcomers I commit to them as best I can to make their lives full, healthy, and secure for the years ahead no matter what their reason is for becoming part of our family.

GREAT GIFT IDEA!

Do you know someone who loves pigs? How about “giving” them a pig as a gift this holiday season! You can choose one of the pigs featured on the Sponsor Page in this newsletter and set up a sponsorship in that person’s name. PLEASE JOIN OUR SPONSOR FAMILY

Ironwood has more than one pig. Its need for more sponsors is big. Perhaps you can help If so, give a yelp And let me know which one you dig.

Help these pigs have the best holiday ever by becoming their “parent” when you decide to sponsor one or more. A monthly donation of $30 will provide your pig’s care plus their share of sanctuary expenses. In exchange you will receive photos and a letter about your pig (or maybe another limerick!) as well as new pictures and an update on your pig during the upcoming year. Remember that sponsoring a pig for someone special for a few months or a year makes a great holiday gift! ---Donna

There once was a piggy named Sammy Who grinned and acted all hammy. When asked where he lived The answer he’d give Was “You mean that I’m not in Miami?”

Pumba’s a pig that is white, He once was a bundle of fright When he lived with some dogs Who barked gobs and gobs He trembled with all of his might.

Dear Santa,

I hear about you every year when it gets cold outside. My people tell me that you go around at night on December 24th with your reindeer helping spread cheer. I’ve been told that you bring nice presents to all of the good pigs and put the naughty pigs to work. I just wanted to let you know that I’ve been a good pig this year.

When new pigs came to my field I didn’t put up a fight. I stayed out of the way and let them play. I even shared my wallow during the day! I was always patient when waiting for my medication. I never got pushy or bit anyone. I even posed for a picture, that’s always so fun.

Now, some of my acquaintances may tell you that I have stolen their breakfast from time to time. I assure you, they had had enough and I was just making sure that they didn’t eat too much. I just want to make sure my field mates stay at a good weight.

I hope this letter gets to you in time so you can put me on your good pig list. I’ll leave some cookies outside for you, something you can’t resist.

Sincerely,

---Boudreaux

Update on Morley

In our July 2013 newsletter Mary wrote an article about the adoption of Morley into a family that had a pig named Alice who was becoming increasingly aggressive towards people. We have found that when there are two pigs in the family they are much less aggressive with people. The introduction of Morley calmed Alice and improved the situation. Here is a recent e-mail from the adoptive family.

Hi Mary,

It has been awhile, so I thought I’d write you a quick email on how Morley is doing. He's quite a bit bigger than Alice, she doesn't try to boss him at all now. And Alice has gotten so much better around other people. Morley is always very kind to her, unless she tries to give him attitude. They are such a good pair!

Morley was so timid around strangers, always afraid. Lately, he is really starting to bloom. Brave enough to meet new people and allow them to even scratch his head.

He's such a good boy and lets me clean his ears while getting a belly rub. I've been handling his feet alot, but I don't think he is ready to let me trim yet. His feet aren't terrible, he moves around the whole acre quite a lot. I'm hoping he will eventually let me trim his feet with the dremel like I do with Alice.

I can't thank you enough for letting me adopt him. He is such a perfect fit in our family.

Shona
Linus was born along with eight other brothers and sisters at the Yuma Humane Society on January 19, 2009. Gwendolyn and Scott, their mom and dad, were found running loose in the desert and the Humane Society took them in. Gwen gave birth not long after reaching the Humane Society. About six weeks after they were born the Humane Society asked us to take the remaining family which now numbered Mom, Dad and five babies so on March 1, 2009 they all came to Ironwood to live. After the babies were weaned Gwen was adopted but not long after her adoption she came back home when the family ended in divorce.

One baby was adopted but Linus, Stephano, Aida and Kelly remained with us. Their first few months they remained in a large pen near us and they were little hellions when we let them out to run around the property. It was great fun watching them grow up.

Once they were old enough all four siblings were released to the same field where Mom and Dad were living. Linus and his siblings soon became friends with the larger herd of pigs from the Peoria rescue and these past four years they all live together in their large field. Linus’ story is sort of the story of him and his siblings since they have always been and will remain together here at Ironwood.

Fitzroy arrived at Ironwood on September 21, 2012. He was part of a larger rescue we were in the process of doing over a 2 1/2 year period from 2010 to 2013. We took 55 pigs in all from another rescue facility. We had taken 19 back in 2002. We finally completed taking in all the pigs in February of this year. His name was Fat Boy but we did not like his name and he wasn’t even fat so we renamed him Fitzroy. We never got any history or information on any of their pigs so I know very little about him. I do know he is a very cute gentle little guy. He is in a field we built to accommodate many of these pigs along with a few others that have joined them. He has had a difficult time competing for food with all his buddies so we built him a small feeding pen so he can eat his meal in peace. He likes that. He liked having his picture taken and being picked to be featured in the holiday newsletter.

Donation Drop Off

For those in the Phoenix area that have donations of blankets, peanut butter, or other wish list items can now drop them off at Carol’s in East Mesa, AZ, near Superstition Springs Mall. Give her a call at 480-981-8069 for directions and to arrange a drop off. Please note that no monetary donations such as cash, checks, gift cards, etc can be accepted at this location. All other material donations are very welcome and much appreciated. Don’t forget blankets since we are in short supply for the winter.
The pot bellied pigs that were originally brought over from Vietnam were black. Over the years they have been mixed with other breeds to produce different colors. While the majority of pot bellies are still black there are now plenty with a combination of black and white. A large number are white pigs that usually have faint black markings particularly on their faces. A small percentage of piggies are grey. Then you have the unusual spotted pigs.

We have had Jeannie and Dexter as our only spotted piggies for a long time. Neither of them are pot bellied pigs and are much larger with longer hair and big ears. This past spring began a trend of spotted pot bellied pigs coming our way. First was Oscar who arrived with his friend Mayer. Then along came Glitzy, a young girl who ended up going to Best Friends Animal Society in Utah and getting adopted. Not far behind her were Pepper and BB who arrived separately but within the same week. Spotted pigs aren’t really rare, but they are unusual. It was strange for us to get four from different sources within a few months’ time.

Each pig is unique. The four latest spotted additions to our herd are all basically a brownish gray with black or dark brown spots. Even though the coloring is similar, their spots and other markings give each an individualized appearance. As I rattle off names and stories about the pigs to people who come to visit the sanctuary, I often get asked, “How do you tell them apart?” In the fields where there are 40 or more black pigs, the answer is not so easy. However, with the spotted piggies, there is no question. They are definitely easy to recognize and remember.
